TODAY'S AGENDA: corporate governance under sanctions pressure and international isolation

New economic environment affects businesses and forces a new perspective on corporate governance systems of Russian companies, in particular, those companies dealing with international counterparties, as well as foreign-invested companies.

In an increasingly uncertain environment, NCSA views its role in the following:

- keeping Russian experts informed of the rapidly changing corporate governance regulation
- conveying opinions of the regulator's representatives and the best experts in corporate governance to community members
- creating a platform for members of the community to share their opinions on the implementation of corporate legislation innovations in their companies' practices
- holding joint community discussions of issues of concern to corporate secretaries in their day-to-day work
- building a proactive approach to creating and implementing regulatory innovations in companies' practices.

To do this, starting 10 March 2022, NCSA has been holding weekly community meetings online and other similar activities to discuss relevant corporate governance issues. The events generally generate a lot of interest, with at least 130 people attending. NCSA has special channels for submitting questions and suggestions on the issues and identifying those of concern to everyone.
